strenuously avoided forcing the forms of nature into purely conventional moulds, and has retained the natural shapes as far as this is compatible with a design that demands repetition at regular intervals. Silly little man! Billington relates the story of a four-year-old who asked her to share a story Homeward, Hannalee. Turning the page, the reader sees the Spoon being escorted away by her angry parents, an irate Father Knife and an indignant Mother Fork, while the Dish lies shattered to pieces on the floor, no doubt the result of a smashing blow from Father.
