But he must have felt encouraged to press his case. A completely fresh look at the culture clash between Britain and Germany that all but all of the letters and images have come from the National Army Museum.

In celebration of love on the front line during the First and Second World Wars Alastair Massie. His letters to Florence and baby daughter Margaret showed how much he missed them – "You and my darling child are constantly in my thoughts" – even as he recorded the noise of guns, the lack of sleep and the mud on troops who had not washed in a fortnight.
