Not all of us fit to stereotyping of Japanese. The taller of the two lit a cigarette and started smoking, seemingly oblivious to the glares he was receiving from those around . TheonlywordthatcanbeabsolutelyusedtodescribeJapanesepeoplethatism It is much better to criticise your own people and country in order for it to grow and prosper, then to trash another's because you have forgotten how about the negative things that go on in your own country and how people really act. I can say with absolute certainty that malice was intended by a couple of the backstabbers I encountered; perhaps others just had to follow suit. No where is perfect.

If the way foreigners who don't know Japan see the Japanese is misconstrued, it is an essential Japanese manner and etiquette when addressing someone new or in a business environment. In that sense it is convenient to avoid topics, such as the conquest and the Spanish colonial period, compared with the United States, border problems, and emigration.
